

ABSTRACT

A field effect sensor is adapted for use in sensing level of fluids and powders.

The sensor uses elongated, parallel electrodes disposed on or within the side wall of a tank.

The longitudinal axes of the electrodes are parallel to the surface of fluid or powder contained in the tank.